10th Chapter IISMUN'25

An event looked up to, by all senior IISians when they are no longer considered students, but esteemed delegates from across the globe not only to discuss global issues but, to resolve them as well. The IIS campus thronged with delegates dressed in Western attire instead of the regular uniform, suddenly young girls it seemed had turned into professional elite ladies and the school boys into sophisticated young men of substance. The make over was not limited to just looks, working on laptops to indulging in discussions to debating on an issue to make their point known was all that kept the delegates geared. Each wore a diplomat's hat, unleashed from all inhibitions, and spoke with conviction asserting his argument. 13th and 14th May were infact, the shortest days of the year for time just lapsed and 48 hours were consumed with the blink of an eye.
